

Hillcrest Red Takes 1 of 2 at State Quarterfinals

Hillcrest Middle School's Mock Trial "Red" Team joined twelve other regional winners in West Hartford on January 11th to present their cases in the quarterfinals round of the statewide Middle School Mock Trial Competition, co-sponsored by the Connecticut Consortium for Law and Citizenship Education (CCLCE) and the Connecticut Bar Association.

Needing to win both of its rounds to advance to the semi-finals round, Hillcrest was defeated by defending state champion Our Lady of Mercy (Madison) before winning its second match-up. Team members could take consolation that Our Lady of Mercy went on to win the state crown again, defeating other semi-finalist teams from King Philip (West Hartford), St. Ann (Bridgeport), St. Rose (Newtown), and Weston middle schools.

Hillcrest's "White" Team also competed in the regional competition a month earlier, but did not advance with its "Red" counterpart to the quarterfinals. Its members were Miles Buroker, Lance Bragg, Justin Lynch, Avery Collins, Madison Newcomer, Kristy Nickson, Emma Thornton, Daniel Yankura, Kayla Scinto, Simon Du, Dylan McEniry, and Paul Edwards.

Drawing from the high school program's 27-year history, the Middle School Mock Trial Program saw 300 students from over 30 middle school teams compete in its seventh year. The students presented arguments relating to the case of State of New Jersey v. Jessie Chandler that involves a robbery of an herbal remedy health and smoothie shop allegedly by employee Jessie Chandler, who's on trial for aggravated robbery.
